Deontay Wilder celebrated his first-round annihilation of heavyweight challenger Dominic Breazeale on Saturday night with a VIP bash at Midtown eatery Pomona and its hidden club, Savage Lounge.

Spies said that defending WBC champ Wilder had a private dinner with fiancée, Telli Swift, and 30 pals, where custom Courvoisier cocktails were named after legendary fighters.

At an afterparty at Savage Lounge — which guests access through Pomona's kitchen — DJ Clue spun tunes, and celebrants included rapper Fat Joe and Nets star D'Angelo Russell.

"I am ready to take on any challenger!" Wilder was overheard telling Pomona's Mike Savage.

The champ was being trailed by Showtime cameras, we hear.

Spotted ringside at the Barclays Center fight, where Wilder knocked out Breazeale in just over two minutes, were Showtime and CBS honcho David Nevins, Floyd Mayweather, hedge funder Jim Chanos, "Billions" co-creators Brian Koppelman and David Levien, Yankees ace CC Sabathia, NFL stars Todd Gurley, Travis Kelce and Deshaun Watson, and Aldis Hodge of Showtime's hot upcoming series "City on a Hill."

Nicki Minaj brought a city block to a standstill early Sunday morning.

After appearing on “Saturday Night Live,” the rapper headed to the Highline Ballroom in Chelsea to perform.

But when a throng of fans greeted her outside the venue, Minaj climbed on top of her chauffeured car while the crowd chanted her lyrics.

A team of bodyguards and cops tried to keep the hordes at bay.

“She arrived a bit late, around 3:40 a.m., and left at 4,” said a spy inside the Hennessy-soaked bash.

After performing “Chun-Li” and “Poke It Out” — the same songs she performed on the show earlier — “she also told her fans this will be her ‘best tour yet’ coming up this year,” the source said. “And when she left, a mob of fans rushed out to chant and sing her songs as she tried to get in the car.”

Scram Jones and DJ Stacks spun tunes inside the venue.

Blame the mayor of Minneapolis, Jacob Frey, for Kevin Hart's shenanigans at the Super Bowl.

Before Hart, a rabid Eagles fan, was caught on national TV trying to crash the trophy ceremony and then dropping an F-bomb, the actor and his entourage attended a pregame brunch organized by nightlife impresario Barry Mullineaux, during which Frey presented Hart with a key to the city.

Since the event was sponsored by Tequila Revolución, Frey, 36, and Hart, 38, decided to pound a few shots for good luck. The rest, as they say, is history. Also at the brunch were newly inducted NFL Hall of Famers Ray Lewis and Randy Moss.

Hart's ex-wife, Torrei, defended the funny man. "Was he driving? No. Was he at the Super Bowl celebrating a victory? Yes," she told Page Six. "It's the Eagles. That's our city. We're both from Philadelphia, so let the man live. He works hard."

Madonna was spotted with a mystery man — who resembled French artist JR — at Megu on Wednesday.

"They were acting like a couple, chatting and laughing closely in a corner" of a private room, a spy said.

Madge's son Rocco interned for the artist in 2014.

JR's posted several images of the Material Girl on Instagram, and she recently included a shot of them together with a cryptic message. "Sometimes you just have to take off the mask and confess!" she wrote.

Her rep did not comment.
